

How a General Contractor's Business Benefits in working with Neo Electrical Solutions.

Your business benefits from working with us

As a general contractor, you depend on subcontractors for various parts of a project. And you want those subcontractors to be credible, knowledgeable, and reliable. After all, their work is a reflection upon you.

The good news is, you have your fair share of subcontractors to work with, but that doesn't mean they are all created equally. With so many options, how do you know which are those you want to partner with and bring on a project?

There are many factors to consider beyond reliability and dependability. You want to consider what else they bring to the table and how will their work benefit you.

As an industrial and commercial electrical installation and maintenance provider, much of our work comes to us from general contractors like you. We appreciate the relationships we've established with our general contractor partners and work hard to deliver value to your business.

We believe our work benefits our general contractor partners in many ways and can benefit you, too.

5 ways we bring value and commitment to our general contractor partners:

1. Safety is our priority

You can sleep at night knowing that, like you, safety is our number one priority and is always top of mind. Along with our daily morning safety huddles, we also conduct weekly job safety inspections and regularly scheduled, all-hands safety meetings. You don't want things to go wrong - either during the project or afterward - caused by faulty electrical work, and trust us, neither do we. And they don't. Our years of experience internally and in the field is the best indicator that we know what we're doing.

2. Training and trends matter

All of our electrical engineers are up-to-date on current trends in the field and engage in continuous education. We stress the importance of staying abreast of the latest trends and training so that we can bring that knowledge to the projects we're working on.

3. Your goals are our goals

Your goals are important to you, so they are important to us. That's why we take a collaborative approach and strive to become a part of the team. We work with you and your other partners toward the same end result on every project.

4. Budgets matter.

The project budget matters and we never lose sight of that. In fact, along with providing the highest level of quality and safety, we are committed to delivering services on time and within budget. We check to ensure schedule goals are met daily.

5. Relationships are critical

The jobs we take aren't about us; they are about helping you bring to life the client's vision. We believe in contributing to that success by providing you with a high level of communication, the ability to solve complex problems, and coming at it with a team approach. We value and appreciate the relationships we establish with our general contractor partners and know that our success is their success.
